

These requirements must be met in order to obtain and/or continue to exercise the privileges of the licence or other form of approval issued by the Authority. In many cases other legislation, including legislation which is not specifically directed at aviation, also applies to the activity and Government departments or other statutory bodies have responsibilities in the area. It is the duty of the regulated party to ensure that it acquaints itself with all requirements affecting its activities and to ensure that it complies with those requirements. The Authority wishes to stress that any licence or other decision of the Irish Aviation Authority does not remove the obligation on regulated persons to comply with other legal requirements relating to the activity.
