YAK 52 AIRCRAFT

The above aircraft type is not eligible for a standard category certificate of airworthiness and accordingly a certificate of airworthiness issued by the state of registration for such an aircraft is ineffective and is not in force for operation of that aircraft outside its state of registration.

In pursuance of Article 7(1) of the Irish Aviation Authority (Airworthiness of Aircraft) Order 1996, such an aircraft would require a flight permit from the Authority to allow its operation in Ireland. Such aircraft, whether or not issued with a currently effective certificate of airworthiness from its state of registration shall not be operated or continue to be operated in the State without such a permit with immediate effect from the date of this notice.

The operation of such an aircraft without a flight permit would constitute an offence by the owner and by a pilot-in-command of that aircraft on any flight being conducted in contravention of Article 7 of the Order and may lead to a prosecution by the Authority.

The registered owner of any such aircraft in the State is hereby advised to apply to the Authority as below for further information where it is desired to continue operating an aircraft of this type.
